European Institute of Women's Health

Founded in 1996, the European Institute of Women's Health (EIWH) is a non-governmental organisation (NGO) that uses an evidence-based to advocate for an equitable, sex and gender sensitive approach in health policy, research, promotion, treatment, and care. The Institute promotes biomedical and socio-economic research that addresses sex and gender-based differences to ensure access to quality treatment and care for women and their families across their lifespan. The EIWH strives to reduce inequities by drawing policy maker's attention to the obstacles that women in minority, migrant, refugee and socio-economic disadvantaged groups face. The Institute's activities work to empower individuals to play an active part in their own health management. The UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) should be integrated into European health and well-being programming, policy, and practice. Concerted efforts should be devoted to promoting and achieving SDG 3 (good health and well-being) 5 (gender equality) and 10 (reducing inequalities) with a diverse group of relevant stakeholders. Europe can do more to follow suit and must make women's health and equality a central focus.
